

Diamond Certificate

Contributed by Administrator
Thursday, 31 May 2007
Last Updated Tuesday, 09 October 2007

Diamond Certificate

Certified Diamond – Always the Best Option

Eight good reasons for certified diamonds to be relied upon:

Verification

of all the measurable aspects of the diamond such as carat weight, color, clarity and cut is done by an institution which is otherwise not connected to the transaction in any way.

Certified

diamond is slightly more expensive when the cost of the certification is added to the cost of the diamond but one need not worry about paying slightly more for such a valuable guarantee.

For

precious diamonds to fetch their optimum market value it is necessary to have a diamond certificate. Every time such a diamond is bought or sold the diamond certificate will be needed to close a deal.

The

diamond certificate is of particular interest to the diamond cutting industry which scrupulously checks the exact quality grade of the diamond reflected in the wholesale cost sheets that record the value of diamonds.

There

is no scope for inaccurate valuation of such precious items as diamonds and the diamond certificate eliminates all such possibilities.

In

the important event of covering the diamond against loss it is the certification of the diamond that would be considered by the insurance company as much as it will help in getting proper compensation in the event of loss of the diamond.

One

has to beware suggestions that by implication harp on the higher price of certified diamonds and ignore them. At such times it is important remember that the slightly higher price is basically the best guarantee of the diamond's quality.

On

many an occasion a diamond transaction could happen between parties that enjoy each other's trust but it is important to remember that a diamond buyer should always insist on verification.